TRIED AND TESTED

The ghost kitchen model removes the single biggest barrier to starting a food business — the cost of a restaurant. No rent on a dining room. No front-of-house staff. No tables, chairs, or walk-in foot traffic required. You rent commercial kitchen time by the hour, cook your Caribbean food, and fulfil orders through DoorDash, Uber Eats, and your own direct ordering channel. The diaspora market — hungry for authentic Caribbean food that tastes like home — is your built-in customer base.

CHAPTER ONE

Finding and Renting Your Commercial Kitchen

1 Where to find kitchen time

Churches and community centres — Caribbean churches especially are natural partners. Their commercial kitchens sit unused on weekdays. Approach the pastor or facilities manager with a simple proposal: rent the kitchen Tuesday to Thursday for $15–$25/hour, or offer a percentage of revenue from community event catering. · Culinary schools — often rent kitchen time to food entrepreneurs at $20–$35/hour during off-hours · Established restaurant kitchens — many restaurants rent their kitchens in the morning before service (6am–11am) for $20–$40/hour · Dedicated shared kitchen facilities — search 'commercial kitchen rental [your city]' for purpose-built shared spaces

2 Your food handler certification and business registration

Food handler certificate: 1-day course, $15–$50. Business registration: vary by location, typically $50–$150. Health department inspection of your ghost kitchen arrangement: free in most areas for shared/rented kitchens. Get these done before your first paid order — not after.

CHAPTER TWO

Your Menu, Your Platforms, and Your Direct Channel

1 Designing your ghost kitchen menu

Start with 5-8 dishes maximum. Too many options slow down your kitchen and increase waste. Lead with your strongest 2-3 dishes — the ones you cook best and that photograph beautifully. For a Caribbean ghost kitchen: jerk chicken meal, curry goat or chicken meal, oxtail and rice, roti with curry, ackee and saltfish breakfast box. Expand based on what sells.

2 DoorDash and Uber Eats — instant customer access with a cost

Creating a restaurant account on DoorDash and Uber Eats gives you immediate access to thousands of local customers with zero marketing spend. The cost: 15-30% commission per order. This is your launch channel. As you build a customer base, migrate regular customers to your direct ordering page where you keep 100% of the revenue.

CHAPTER THREE

Building Your Direct Ordering Channel and Loyal Customer Base

1 Your direct ordering page

A simple website with your menu, photos, ordering form, and payment link is the most valuable asset in your ghost kitchen business. Every customer who orders directly instead of through a platform saves you 15–30% in commission. At 20 orders per day at $15 average, that is $45–$90 saved every single day by migrating customers to direct ordering.

2 The Caribbean community loyalty advantage

A Caribbean ghost kitchen that consistently delivers authentic jerk chicken, curry, and rice and peas to the Caribbean community in your city builds loyalty that no generic food delivery competitor can match. The diaspora parent who orders your food once and it tastes like home will order every week. They will tell their WhatsApp group. They will order for family gatherings. One loyal Caribbean community customer can be worth $500–$1,500 per year in orders.

BUILD YOUR BUSINESS WEBSITE – PERSONAL NOTE

While all the steps in this guide work to get your first clients through community outreach, Your direct ordering page — built quickly on Lovable — is the most profitable investment in your ghost kitchen business. Every order through your own page instead of DoorDash or Uber Eats saves you 15–30% in commission. That difference adds up to thousands of dollars per year. I found it significantly easier to use Lovable — an AI site builder where you describe what you want and it builds a clean professional site in minutes. No coding. Check it out.
